The Euro-FMG Program was designed to evaluate and harmonize attitudes towards the euro, and to better understand the reasons why the euro is a symbol of integration in certain countries but not in others. A total of 3050 adults representative of the general population from 14 European countries and 4 European regions participated in the survey, conducted between January and March 2009. This report presents the summary results of the Euro-FMG survey, which reveals that key features of the euro that are associated with its integration in opinion include a strong legal status (favourable among citizens of countries where the euro is established as their legal tender and its infrastructural functioning (favourable among citizens of countries with a national currency that has similar characteristics to the euro), its stability (favourable among citizens of countries with a national currency that is not stable) and its democratic legitimacy (favourable among citizens of countries where the euro is established as their legal tender). Conversely, key features that are associated with its potential to hinder integration in opinion include its risk profile (favourable among citizens of countries where the euro is established as their legal tender), its lack of an active distribution policy (favourable among citizens of countries with a national currency that is stable) and its market unpredictability (favourable among citizens of countries where the euro is not yet established as their legal tender).Q: What kind of quiver is this? I have found this in my yard, but I'm having a hard time identifying it. I'm assuming it's not a bird or butterfly quiver, because the feathers are lying this way and the "arm" looks like a 6-inch metal rod. It looks like it was dropped, and, because of the birds of prey in the area, the "arm" is bent all out of shape. I've attached a photo and is hoping someone can identify it. A:
