Are cognitive factors related to health-related quality of life? A cross-sectional analysis of stroke and dementia outpatients. This cross-sectional study aimed to identify whether the level of cognitive impairment, measured using a brief cognitive screening instrument, was related to health-related quality of life (HRQOL) in outpatients with stroke and dementia. Associations were assessed between a range of HRQOL outcomes and cognitive status, using the cognitive screening instrument, General Deterioration Scale (GDS). Differences in HRQOL by cognition were not significant for stroke patients ($n = 188$). Mean GDS scores were significantly higher for dementia than for stroke ($p = .0001$); however, GDS scores were not significantly associated with any HRQOL domains. There was also no relationship between cognitive status and HRQOL, when adjusted for age, sex, number of comorbid conditions, and disease severity. GDS scores were related to an increased length of stay, measured using a measure of disease severity. Cognitive screening was not associated with HRQOL.
