contortus* exposure to prevent a subsequent infection with WSL. Statistical analysis {#Sec17} ----- To test hypotheses, Fisher's exact test was used for the mares and the foals, and General Linear Models for the stallions, respectively. Mares and foals were used as study animals and the effect of sex and age was considered as fixed effect, while the different antibody classes were used as repeated measures. Stallions were used as control animals.
Levels of significance were considered as 0.05.
Univariate analysis (Fisher's exact test and General Linear Models) was applied to test associations of sex and age with the antibody levels and infection with H. contortus in mares and foals, respectively. Mare and foal antibody response to H. contortus within each age group were analysed using statistical models: (a) 'Total' H. contortus antigen levels were considered as repeated measures, (b) 'Specific' and
