Potential of HADB3, a novel bacterial non-ribosomal peptide synthetase, to generate short peptides. Short, non-ribosomal peptides often have beneficial properties, such as antimicrobial activities or signalling activities. In this study, we attempted to generate short non-ribosomal peptides by introducing a module from a bacterial non-ribosomal peptide synthetase (NRPS) into a different NRPS. If the synthetic function of a bacterial NRPS is the same as that of a related natural NRPS, the substrate specificity and reaction products are likely to be similar. Therefore, the derived peptides are likely to have similar biological activities. We selected HADB3, a homo-bifunctional NRPS in the Bacillus subtilis group of organisms, which contains both a peptidyl carrier protein (PCP) domain and a condensation domain. We converted the PCP domain of HADB3 into the condensation domain and, as a result, generated a novel HADB3 derivative, HAHB6, which includes two peptides of identical amino acid composition. HAHB6 exhibited antimicrobial activity against the human pathogens of the Gram-positive bacterium Streptococcus pyogenes, but not against Escherichia coli. This study demonstrates that HAD camera system for remotely displaying monitored video data and more particularly pertains to displaying video data which is transmitted from a remote transceiver. 2. Description of the Prior Art The use of remote camera surveillance devices is known in the prior art. More specifically, remote camera surveillance devices heretofore devised and utilized for the purpose of remotely viewing camera video data are known to consist basically of familiar, expected and obvious structural configurations, notwithstanding the myriad of designs encompassed by the crowded prior art which have been developed for the fulfillment of countless objectives and requirements. By way of example, U.S. Pat. No. 5,703,597 to Komatsu et al. discloses an image signal control system. U.S. Pat. No. 5,742,407 to Fletcher discloses a video security system. U.S. Pat. No. 5,790,068 to Koyama discloses a video camera and display system and method of processing analog video signals. U.S. Pat. No. 5,808,551 to Koike discloses a wireless security system using a digital camera. While these devices fulfill their respective, particular objective and requirements, the aforementioned patents do not describe a camera system for remotely displaying video data for use with an unmanned aerial vehicle. In this respect, the camera system for remotely displaying video data according to the present invention substantially departs from the conventional concepts and designs of the prior art, and in doing so provides an apparatus primarily developed for the purpose of displaying video data transmitted from a remote transceiver. Therefore, it can be appreciated that there exists a continuing need for new and improved camera system for remotely displaying video data which can be used for displaying video data which is transmitted from a remote transceiver.
