Since the incidence of EPRF is much lower than that of an early recurrence of HCC in patients with HCC, it is likely that the latter can be more reliably distinguished from EPRF. There are some concerns about the treatment of EPRF. Generally, it is thought that EPRF is a benign condition, but surgical resection has been reported to be associated with tumour seeding and a high risk of local recurrence \[\[@CR24], \[@CR25]\]. Recently, a multicentric study showed that tumour resection was not associated with local recurrence \[\[@CR26]\]. Furthermore, surgery is not considered to be necessary for the treatment of EPRF because it is usually self-limited \[\[@CR27]\]. If conservative management is successful for EPRF, regular follow-up is not indicated. Although the study regarding this issue is limited by the small number of patients, a surveillance protocol for EPRF may be considered for patients with HCC. Based on our results, F2, F3 and EPRF occurred at a later stage than F1. Since the patients with F1 and those with F2, F3 and EPRF had no differences in their background factors, the above-mentioned background factor may be related to the progression of the disease from the earlier stage to the later stage. This study is limited by its retrospective nature, the fact that it did not include patients with EPRF, and the relatively small number of study cases. In addition, it is unclear whether the F1 and the F2 were synchronous or metachronous. However, for these reasons, our results should be interpreted with caution. Furthermore, the role of image analysis with fusion imaging or magnetic resonance imaging to identify EPRF and to classify liver nodules was not evaluated in this study. Conclusion {#Sec12} ===== In conclusion, our study showed that the clinicopathological background factors of HCC

Field of the Invention The present invention relates to a high-frequency module including a chip capacitor, a distributed constant line, a dielectric substrate, and a ground conductor on a flat plate, and is directed to, in particular, prevention of an adverse effect of a high-frequency signal on peripheral circuits. 2. Description of the Related Art A high-frequency module typically includes a chip capacitor, a distributed constant line, a dielectric substrate, and a ground conductor on a flat plate, and is used in a variety of electronic circuits. In recent years, techniques for forming such a high-frequency module by the use of surface-mount technology have been developed to reduce its cost. Such a high-frequency module is suitable for use in portable electronic devices such as cellular phones and portable information terminals. In particular, a high-frequency module that is built into a portable electronic device such as a cellular phone is preferably configured to be small in size and light in weight, to reduce the thickness of the device. FIG. 14A is a perspective view illustrating a high-frequency module disclosed in Japanese Unexamined Patent Application Publication No. 2004-229581, and FIG. 14B is an exploded perspective view illustrating a high-frequency module as described in Japanese Unexamined Patent Application Publication No. 2004-229581. As is shown in FIGS. 14A and 14B, a high-frequency module 900 includes a circuit board 901, and a chip capacitor 903, a dielectric substrate 905, a microstrip line (GND line) 907, and a chip capacitor 909 are mounted on the circuit board 901. In particular, the chip capacitor 903, the dielectric substrate 905, the microstrip line 907, and the chip capacitor 909 are mounted on a ground conductor 911 by flip chip bonding. In the high-frequency module 900 described in Japanese Unexamined Patent Application Publication No. 2004-229581, the dielectric substrate 905 is provided to be coupled to the circuit board 901 via the ground conductor 911. Therefore, in a state where the high-frequency module 900 is mounted on a circuit board (not 6d1f23a050
