In this tutorial, we will learn how to use Spring Framework for a simple task. Why Spring? Spring framework was first released in 2001 and since then, the number of its users has been growing. These days, it has been included in many platforms. Spring is a leading component-based web application framework. You can read more about it in the official Spring documentation. Also, the Spring framework has become a popular choice for framework-based application development. Spring provides many inbuilt components that help you work with databases, web, security, and transactions. In this tutorial, we will learn about how to use Spring framework in order to develop a simple application with following benefits: Provides a common architecture for Web applications Defines Java class that plays a role as a central controller for Web applications Checks HTTP requests for proper authorization and disallows direct access to application internals Interprets URL paths to determine which JSP page to display Displays requested data as a formatted table Provides built-in security Spring framework has one major weakness: that is the documentation. It is quite difficult to understand how to use Spring if you do not have any prior programming experience. For that reason, I have used the Spring framework and I have reviewed the official Spring documentation to create a very simple application that uses Spring framework. In this tutorial, we will learn how to create a simple application that requires using Spring Framework. Before we begin, it would be wise to have the following tools: Firstly, we will create a very simple Spring project, using Maven for managing dependencies. Why Maven? Maven is a popular open-source build automation tool used for projects built with Java. You can learn more about Maven in the official documentation. Now, we will create the first part of the application, starting from the pom.xml file. This
