Granulocyte colony-stimulating factor attenuates IL-4-mediated fibrogenesis in mice. Granulocyte colony-stimulating factor (G-CSF) has been shown to be beneficial in some inflammatory conditions, such as periodontal disease, ulcerative colitis, and arthritis, but the role of G-CSF in the development of fibrotic disease is unclear. This study investigated whether G-CSF could ameliorate the development of pulmonary fibrosis induced by the administration of IL-4 to mice. G-CSF significantly decreased the wet/dry lung weight ratio of IL-4-injected mice compared with that of controls and, in the pulmonary tissue, attenuated the severity of alveolar septal thickening, peribronchial and

The 'NHS At 10' campaign aims to raise awareness of the inequity of NHS healthcare in the UK. Surgeons, doctors and NHS staff, both clinical and non-clinical, working across the UK will all be asked to either print or email the image of the At 9 On Call screen on their work computer screens. The Surgeons' informatics team at Southampton General Hospital is sponsoring the campaign and wants to promote the campaign by adding the At 9 On Call and At 8 On Call options to their radiology booking system. As the At 9 On Call image is already in place, they would like to show the At 9 On Call screen instead of the default At 10 On Call screen. It has been identified that when using the server's default settings for which image is shown to patients it defaults to the At 10 On Call image. They would like to show the patient the At 9 On Call image instead of this. Where a different server setting is applied to the decision in their booking application, this work will be done to ensure this single change is applied as a step in their development. This is a one-time operation and can be completed within a few hours. We have documented the issue and found a number of relevant web links that can be used for documentation purposes.
