Facebook took some serious hits last year due to numerous privacy scandals. For many people, however, this is a breach that gets in the way of productivity. Users who are constantly messaging friends on Facebook have it tough to effectively track their time while working. Some have found an alternative to Facebook that lets them ignore the social site, and focus on their task at hand. It only takes three seconds to log in to RethinkNOW, making it easy to get a new perspective. Time, like a series of glass doors, is no longer open. The glass is now closed, and the door is locked. Users can literally change the way they view the world — or at least a portion of it. They are no longer treated to nonsense. Facebook and Twitter are no longer part of the equation — they are replaced by a simple text field. Although it may sound odd, RethinkNOW is actually quite simple. Once users are logged in, they can view a variety of posts created by other users. They can also view some email content that was sent to them. One of the coolest features, however, is the ability to respond directly from within RethinkNOW. Doing so, however, requires that users use a chat program such as Skype or Google Talk. According to RethinkNOW co-founder, Joel Solomon, this is a crucial feature. He believes that users are much more likely to complete a task if they work while being able to talk to each other. His theory is that being able to see what others are doing and offering comments and feedback makes it easier to be more productive. Solomon also claims that this is a particularly good feature when used on the road. While traveling, it is unlikely that you will want to log in to Facebook and Twitter. When using RethinkNOW, however, it becomes a lot easier to communicate with people working on a project. Not only can users comment on their work, they can also help each other find solutions to problems. Although the service currently has a free service option, the company is working on an enterprise service. With it, companies that want to use R

DraftSight® is a feature-rich 2D and 3D Targeting the accessory protein RasGRP2 to detect amplification of KRAS genes in patients with non-small cell lung cancer. Mutations in genes encoding Ras family of proteins are the most frequently found molecular events associated with non-small cell lung cancer. In most cases, the alterations are heterozygous and occur in codon 12 of KRAS gene. To develop a rapid screening technique to detect copy number alterations of genes encoding Ras family proteins, we targeted the RasGRP2 gene in 6 lung cancer cell lines and 253 frozen primary lung adenocarcinoma samples by quantitative real-time polymerase chain reaction. All of the cell lines had a single copy of the RasGRP2 gene, while 2 (one was a minor clone) out of 25 (8%) primary lung adenocarcinoma samples were positive for a rearrangement of the RasGRP2 gene. In contrast, 16.1% of primary lung adenocarcinoma samples had amplification of at least one of KRAS genes. About 9% of primary lung adenocarcinoma samples had amplification of both KRAS and RasGRP2 genes, whereas none of the lung cancer cell lines had such a double copy. Moreover, the levels of RasGRP2 mRNA in KRAS-amplified tumors were significantly higher than that in tumors without KRAS amplification. These results suggest that targeting the RasGRP2 gene by a suitable primer-target combination can serve as a rapid screening technique to detect amplification of KRAS and possibly other Ras family members.
