Adobe recently unveiled some of its software next-generation Artificial Intelligence, which has the company talking about how it now could do many of the tasks that we used to have to do manually. The AI is gathered through the company's Stevenote Learning Machine, or SLM, that is capable of analyzing over 20,000 pictures every day. SLM also has the ability to fully orchestrate the AI, so a single issue can be presented in multiple ways and time periods.
