settings of your Windows Explorer to default. A study on the relationship between the movement of the laryngeal isthmus and the hyperkinetic aryepiglottic fold in laryngeal ventricular dilatation. This study was carried out to clarify the relationship between the movement of the laryngeal isthmus (LI) and the hyperkinetic aryepiglottic fold (AHF) in laryngeal ventricular dilatation (LVD). Two dimensional (2D) translaryngeal videofluoroscopic images of the upper respiratory tract were taken in 16 patients with LVD (8 patients with parapharyngeal space abscess, 6 patients with parapharyngeal abscess extending to the hypopharynx and 2 patients with pharyngitis). In 8 of the 16 patients, the movement of LI was markedly different from that of the AHF. The AHF was closed during inspiratory phase, and opened during expiratory phase in all 8 patients. In contrast, LI was opened during inspiratory phase, and closed during expiratory phase in 4 of the 8 patients. In the remaining 4 patients, the movements of LI and AHF were similar. The present study demonstrated that the movement of LI was markedly different from that of the AHF in 8 of the 16 patients with LVD. Biological effects
